Severe Weather Outlook Monday, May 29, 2017

Hazardous Weather

Additional scattered showers and storms are expected mostly across Central TX today. While severe weather is not expected, a few storms could be strong with gusty winds and small hail. Due to the recent heavy rain in Central TX, additional rainfall may result in localized flooding.

Thunderstorms will be possible today, mainly along and south of Interstate 10. Tonight, storm chances will shift to include most locations west of the Pecos River. Some storms may become strong to severe, and be capable of producing hail, gusty winds, and locally heavy rainfall. Temperatures will stay just below normal, with highs in the 80s for most, and lows tonight in the 50s and 60s.
